STRANGER.—“Yes, I have had a slight accident, and I do not know what to do away north here, especially as I cannot bear the idea of putting such a fine Machine as this into any hands,—possibly only to get it more damaged.”

NATIVE.—“Well, I would advise you to take it along to G. S. ANDERSON, and you will be perfectly safe. He will put it all right for you in a short time. We all go to him when anything goes wrong with our cycles.”

S.—“Thanks very much. Does he keep bells? I nearly ran down a poor old woman for want of one, and hence this accident.”

N.—“Yes; he keeps everything in the line, from a bell, to a complete Machine. In fact, he is the only maker we have here.”

S.—“Oh, is he a maker also?”

N.—“Yes; he makes the ‘Zetland Princeps’ cycle, and a very pretty Machine it is.”

S.—“Thanks very much. Good morning. Did you say Black’s Buildings?”

S.—“Good morning.”

THE OLD SHETLAND DIALECT and PLACE NAMES OF SHETLAND.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS:—

The Scotsman says:—Philological research and publishing enterprise in distant Thule are illustrated by the appearance of a volume on the The Dialect and Place Names of Shetland, containing the substance of two popular lectures on the subject delivered to Lerwick audiences by Professor Jacob Jacobsen, of the University of Copenhagen. These lectures may be described as the cream of researches, prolonged and careful, which Dr Jacobsen, a thoroughly competent authority, has pursued on the spot. His findings, though they may not be accepted on all points by other philologists, are of special interest not only to Shetlanders, but to the inhabitants of those large tracts of Scotland in which traces of Norse blood, and of Norse names and customs, are to be found.

The Dundee Advertiser says:—“Dr Jacobsen has infused into the subject a vast amount of really interesting matter. As a further indication of the value of Dr Jacobsen's work, it may be added that it was a thesis on the subject which earned for himself the degree of Doctor of Philosophy. The particularly handsome manner in which the publishers have issued the book deserves to be acknowledged.”

The Aberdeen Free Press says:—Such is the title of an interesting volume consisting of two popular lectures delivered at Lerwick and other places in Shetland, and setting forth some of the results of a series of investigations into the remains of the old Norse language in Shetland. The Vikings and their descendants played a most important part in the history of Shetland, which was, indeed, to a large extent the basis of their operations in the western haaf. Mr Jacobsen has not only collected a great deal of information, but has put it into an attractive form, and the volume will be a welcome, as well as useful, addition to the library of Shetland literature.

The Northern Weekly says:—“The Dialect and Place Names of Shetland has been issued by Messrs T. & J. Manson of Lerwick, and is a credit to the publishing enterprise of the Far North. The book contains the substance of two admirable lectures on the subject delivered at Lerwick, by Professor Jacob Jacobsen of the Copenhagen University, and in book form they read like a romance to the antiquarian and historian. And, indeed, it will be surprising if such a book does not make antiquarians of the great mass of those who have hitherto looked on these subjects as of the dry-as-dust order—to be avoided.”

T. & J. MANSON

“NEWS” OFFICE

P R E F A C E.

THE seventh number of "The Shetland Almanac and Directory" will be found to possess very much the same features as previous issues. Every effort has been made to make the Almanac as complete as possible, and it is hoped that, as hitherto, the publication will be found a useful compendium of local information. The Publishers have again to tender their thanks to many correspondents, in the country and elsewhere, who have assisted them in the work of preparation.

BILLS OF EXCHANGE.

A Bill of Exchange is a written order by one person (the drawer) upon another person or firm (the drawees) to pay at a definite time a definite sum of money. If this order is accepted by the drawee, the bill then becomes valuable, and must be paid first by the drawee (acceptor), and second (if the Bill has been protested for non-payment by the acceptor) by the endorsers or drawer.

NOTES AND BILLS.

Notes and Bills, unless payable "at sight" or "on demand," have (in England) 3 days of grace added to the time they are due; thus, if due 60 days after date, will be payable 63 days after date. Bills drawn on foreign cities are often drawn "at usance," i.e., for the length of time after sight allowed by the law of the place. The days of grace also vary in foreign countries.

REGISTERED FISHING BOATS.

Owners and masters of boats used for fishing for purposes of sale must comply with the following rules:—

1. Every boat must be registered, lettered, and numbered, as required by the Sea Fisheries Regulations.
2. The master of every registered Boat must have on board at all times (unless specially exempted by the Board of Trade) the Certificate of Registry.
3. If the Certificate is lost, immediate application must be made for another.
4. The Certificate must be presented to the Fishery Officer, or Registrar, Custom House—a. once a-year for examination and endorsement; b. on change of master, for same to be noted thereon.
5. On a change of ownership, or on removal to another Collectorship, of any Registered Boat, a fresh Certificate must be applied for, and the former Certificate given up to be cancelled.

No Compliance with either of these regulations renders owner and master liable to a penalty not exceeding £20, besides seizure and detention of boat.

TO TELL THE WEIGHT OF CATTLE.

By means of the following table we may with considerable accuracy estimate the weight of cattle without the trouble of putting them upon the steelyard. It is to be observed, however, that in very fat cattle the four quarters will be about one-twentieth more, while in those in a very lean state they will be one-twentieth less than the weights shown.

ROYAL NAVAL RESERVE.

FIRST CLASS.—Qualifications—Applicants must not be above 30 years of age. The standard of height has been fixed at 5 ft. 4 in., and the girth round the chest not less than 32 inches. Every applicant must prove at least six years' sea service, within the last ten years, and of these six years' service, two years' service at least as able seaman in foreign-going or regular coasting vessels. Six months' service as skipper in first-class fishing vessels may be accepted in lieu of two years' service as able seaman.—Emoluments.—£10 4s, to £10 6s 4d per annum. (Enrolments for this class have now ceased.)

SECOND CLASS.—Qualifications—Applicants must prove that for three years they have followed a seafaring life either in foreign-going, coasting, fishing, or other vessels. Fishermen who regularly follow their calling may be enrolled as such. Age 19 to 30.—Emoluments.—£6 7s to £6 9s 4d per annum, with a suit of Uniform Clothing extra. (Enrolments for this class have also ceased.)

Second Class men who hold the rating of "Trained Men" and are not over 32 years of age may be promoted to the new "Qualified Seamen" class on successfully completing 6 months training in H.M. Ships on the same condition as men of the "Seamen" Class.

"SEAMEN" CLASS.—Qualifications and Emoluments the same as for Second Class men (old system). Volunteers of the "seamen" class must within their first term of enrolment complete, or enter upon, a period of six months' training in H. M. Ships, and men who fail to comply with this condition will not be re-enrolled. On the satisfactory completion of the six months' training, the men are advanced to the "Qualified Seamen" Class, with retainer and drill pay on the same scale as the first class (old system). On completing a further period of six months' training in H. M. Ships, (which however may, at the option of the Volunteer, be divided into two periods of three months each), the men become entitled to a pension under the conditions applicable to the old First Class Reserve.

PENSIONS.—First-Class Reserve men who have served 20 years become entitled at the age of 60 to a pension of £12.

FAIR ISLE, south-west end of Fair Isle, on the promontory named the Scaddon. Group flashing white light, showing four flashes in quick succession every 40 secs., there being an interval of half-a-minute between the groups, vis. 16 nautic miles in clear weather, and as far round as the island will permit, that is between the bearings of about S by E round by E, and N to NW by W; but between the bearings NW by W, and W by N it will be visible, except when close to, when it will be obscured by the high ground of Meoness.

FAIR ISLE.—A fog siren sounding 2 blasts, high, low, each of 5 secs. dura., in quick succ. every 3 mins. is est. at Scaddon Lt.-H., sw end of island.

FAIR ISLE.—A group FL. white Lt., showing 2 FLS. in quick suc. every 30 secs., vis. from N by E  $\frac{1}{2}$  E through W to E by S  $\frac{3}{4}$  S, elev. 262 feet above H. W., vis. 23 miles is exh. on Skroo promontory, NE end of the island about 250 yds. sw by W  $\frac{1}{4}$  W from the ext. of the Nizz, the NE pt. of the island. Also a fog siren, sounding three blasts, low, high, low, each of 3 secs. dura., in quick succ. every 3 mins., is est. at the Lt. H.

Caution.—When in the vicinity of Fair Isle in thick weather, it is possible the high note of one of the above sirens may alone be heard; great care is therefore necessary to time the exact interval the sound lasts.

SWARBACKS MINN. — Fixed, showing white from about N 25 W to about N 63 E; red between about N 63 E and S 85 E. This red arc covers the Skerries off Swarbacks Head. Small, unreliable.

BURRA ISLE.—A small F. Lt., unreliable, and not constantly attended, showing red from N 34 E to N 52 E., over W. Skerry;

W., is exh. in 60 6 $\frac{1}{2}$  N, 1 20 $\frac{3}{4}$  W on Fuglaness, w coast of the isl., approach to Scalloway from the sw.

VAILA SOUND is shown from the top of a small storehouse of masonry erected on the point called the Ram's Head, and is elevated about 50 ft. above high water. It shows a quickly flashing Light about 16 flashes per minute, white between the bearings north 15° east and south 16 east, and red between the bearings north 15° east and north 16° west. From the seaward the Light is shut out by Vaila Island on bearings eastward of about north 40° East. The bearings are magnetic, and from the ship. The light is not attended by a keeper throughout the night, and may possibly be extinguished, or get out of order.

URA FIRTH, small fixed white and red unreliable, erected on Hills-wick Ness, white, betw. South 67° East, round by North to South 57 West; red between the bearing of 67° East to South 46° East.

NONESS. — Quick - flashing white light, showing about 16 flashes per minute, seen from a bearing about S 42° W round by north to south, or as far as the land will permit. When approaching from north-east, light shows over Mousa Island. Small, unreliable.

BALTA SOUND, small, unreliable showing white from a bearing about North 27° East, to about South 86° West; and red between the bearings about north 27 East, and North 75° East.

COMPANION

Mansons' Shetland Almanac, 1898.

Chased by the Press-Gang.

A SHETLAND SKETCH.

By JOHN NICOLSON, Author of "The Broken Jar," etc.

THE foundation of this tale is laid in the reign of George the Third, a time rendered a terror by the press-gang. No man, except perhaps the aged and infirm, could consider himself in safety, for, perhaps at the very moment when he least expected it, he might be pounced upon, and taken away to fight for his country. This entailed great hardship to the family left behind, for in most cases it was the bread-winner who was taken, and they, the family, were left with little or no means of being provided for.

The scene opens in a wild and rugged part of the mainland of Shetland, a part which formed an excellent model of the characteristics of a Shetland crofting and fishing district. A series of crofters' houses, surrounded by small patches of cultivated land, stood on either side of a long river-like "voe," along the shore of which lay, safely secured, the boats belonging to the fishermen of the place.

The night in question was one of those so often seen in Shetland. It was winter, and for a considerable time the ground had been covered with snow, but now a thaw had set in and robbed the earth of its mantle of white, with the exception of the most sheltered places; thus the rugged and time-worn hills here and there streaked with white, made indeed a weird looking scene. Thick heavy clouds shrouded the sky, through which the moon would unveil her face for a brief moment, and then vanish as if afraid of witnessing such a dark and gloomy scene; in short, there were every signs of a coming storm.

We shall now, for a short season, leave this dark picture and return to one that is a little more pleasant, viz., the interior of John Tamson's cottage. Great indeed was the contrast presented between there and the outside. Everything had such a comfortable appearance about it. A bright peat fire glowed on the hearth, and by its flickering beams you could see that the face of each inmate bore a look of contentment, even down to the dog that lay blinking lazily at the back of the "hertstane." In the corner of the "restin' chaer" sat old John making a kishie, and close by, in the "straen chaer," was Janet his wife, who, although sixty summers had passed over her head, was still able to ply her knitting needles as deftly as when she was twenty, and opposite this happy couple sat their son Willie engaged in mending some fishing requisite. This was not their only child, but the younger of two sons, the elder, Magnie, having gone to sea when merely a youth, and as no word regarding him had been received for a number of years they mourned him as dead, and thus it came to be that Willie was their sole dependance.

This evening had passed pleasantly by, as was invariably the case at their fireside. John laid aside the article on which he had been working, Willie followed his example, and both were now enjoying a quiet smoke, and pleasantly discussing topics of general interest, while in the meantime Janet was preparing the supper.

The old "wag at da wa'" had just tolled the eleventh hour, and the supper of tatties and sillocks being ready, Janet was setting it on the table, when all of a sudden the trio were startled by a heavy tramp of feet on the "brig-stanes" in front of the house, and almost instantly the door was banged open and four armed men stood on the floor. It is impossible to describe the look of horror that overspread the faces of John and his wife; too well they knew that the object of this visit was to snatch from them their darling son, and simultaneously each poured forth their souls in silence to God, that their boy might be protected; but Willie remained unmoved, a look of stern determination crossed his handsome face, and with a firm voice he demanded to know their errand.

The man that appeared to lead the gang, then stepped forward, and after closely scrutinising the surroundings, answered in a tone of contempt,

"My man, you scarcely need have made such an enquiry, and I hardly need waste valuable time in answering you, suffice to say that His Majesty The King desires you for his service, and I therefore ask you to come along with us, and make no further ado, or if otherwise, it is my duty to take you forcibly."

Willie got up, and drawing his muscular figure to its full height, replied in a clear firm voice,

"Ye say dat His Majesty wants servants, an' dat I'll no dispute, bit will he seek dem in a richt menner? Na, lie'll send da laeks o' you ta scurry da country ower, an' rob da midder o' her darlin' son, da bairn o' hit's faider, an' leave hunders ta fant, twe-tee-shee sic a governmint."

The greater part of Willie's answer was utterly unintelligible to the Englishmen, but the leader apparently took it for granted, that it did not contain very many complimentary remarks on the powers that be, for he thundered forth—"Hold your jaw, you young whelp; it is not your place to criticise the actions of the government, so you either come along with us quietly, or, as I have said already, failing that I shall use compulsion."

Willie's only reply was this:—"It sall never be sed, dat wi' my ain free will, I left my dear pairents ta want, sae daed ye nicht tak' me, bit livin' ye niver sall."

"Very well," was the answer, "I give you ten minutes in which to make up your mind, as to whether you'll go in peace or not," and then the four withdrew to the door, and began to converse in low tones.

All the time Janet had been weeping bitterly. John had been gazing in a very sorrowful manner at the glowing embers, but all the same his brain had not been idle, for no sooner did the gang go to the door, than he, without altering his position, or his dejected look in the least, whispered, but loud enough for his son to hear,

"Di midder an' me 'ill geng an' mak' ready da peerie boat, try an' gie dem da slip, an' dan mak' fir da caive i' da Holm o' Taing."

Willie saw through the idea at once, and likewise the part that he had to play, and said loud enough for the gang to hear—

" Folk, it hurts me ta see you greetin', an' takin' on sae, I wiss 'at ye wid geng i'ta da ben-room."

Both parents rose at once, and after kissing their son, went slowly into, what would have appeared to a stranger to be another room, but which was in reality the barn, it being customary in most country houses to have a door to the barn behind the "hertstane," while the ben-room is at the other end of the house. Closing the door behind them, they quickly made their exit through an opening used for taking in corn, and with all possible haste made for the beach.

The time allowed had almost expired, when, with a sudden leap Willie bounded through the barn door, but the gang were aroused; three of them followed through the inside passage, while the leader ran to the outside, thinking that no doubt an outlet existed somewhere.

Almost as Willie gained the opening, he was grasped from behind by the back of his jacket, but with great presence of mind, he succeeded in leaving the objectionable article in the hands of his would-be captors, and with a jump was in the open air, but only to be confronted by the leader, who with a strenuous effort attempted to lay hold on him, but one blow from his fist caused the leader to measure his length on the not too dry ground, and then Willie fled like the wind towards the seashore.

He arrived there not a moment too soon, for the trio with whom he had left his garment were in eager pursuit. Seizing the gunwale, he with a tremendous push, sent the boat clear of the shore, and jumping in, laid hold of the oars, which the forethought of his parents had placed ready for use, and in shorter time than it takes to relate, had placed fifty yards of water between him and his pursuers, who saw, much to their chagrin, that their scheme was defeated, because Willie possessed the only small boat available at that place, and before they could go to the next "noost," which was some distance away, they knew that it would be a fruitless effort to attempt pursuit.

Willie pulled with all his might to reach his destination, because his experienced eye told him that the storm which had been threatening all night, would come ere long, and naturally he desired to be there before it came; but he was not destined to do so. He detected a steady increase of the wind, at first a weird "oobin" sound, growing louder and louder, until with a noise resembling a shriek, the storm broke in all its fury. Still he strove to pull in the desired direction, but it was more than mortal was capable of. The water hissed and boiled, as if a demon was in its midst, and the frail craft trembled beneath the stroke of the foaming billows, that dashed against its sides, and drenched its occupant with spray. Seeing that to attempt reaching the holm in the teeth of such a hurricane, was useless, he, with a silent prayer to God for guidance and protection, laid in one of the oars, and using the other for keeping the boat straight, he seated himself in the stern, and allowed her to run before the gale, for experience taught him that this was all that was left for him to do.

On, on, the little craft sped, bearing its lonely occupant he knew not where. It would indeed be useless to attempt relating all the particulars of that dreary night; his perilous position, can be better imagined than described. Repeatedly the boat was on the point of being engulfed, in spite of all his precautions to prevent its doing so. Having been taken by surprise, he had no clothing to protect him from the bitter blast, he was drenched to the skin, and his benumbed fingers were scarcely capable of holding the oar. But gradually this dreary night wore by, and as grey daylight began to appear on the sky the fury of the gale commenced to abate. When it was sufficiently light for him to be enabled to see all around, he viewed his surroundings, but alas! nothing met his eager gaze but an endless stretch of water on every side. His prospects and situation looked so utterly hopeless, that he was on the point of throwing in his oar and giving way to despair, when chancing to look ahead he detected what seemed to be the sail of a vessel on the distant horizon. This seemed to inspire a new hope within his breast, and to strengthen his exhausted frame with a new energy, for seizing the oars he began to pull in the direction of the object. Long and tiring was that pull, but he was rewarded in seeing that his efforts were not in vain, for he saw that the vessel was coming towards him. Nearer, and nearer came the two crafts to each other, until Willie was able, by shouting with all his might, to attract the attention of the crew. He saw the vessel heave to and a boat being lowered, and then utterly exhausted he fell down in the bottom of the boat, and now we shall leave him and return to his parents.

In doing so we pass over a year. Again it is winter, and just a year from the memorable night already recorded. A fierce snow-storm raged outside. Again at their fireside we find John and Janet, but alas! how great an alteration since we saw them last; even to a stranger a glance would be sufficient to know that indeed "a light is from their household gone." Time had done a certain amount to removing the sad occurrence from their memories, yet this night had re-opened an old wound. Deep silence reigned within, not a sound could be heard, save for the wild gusts of wind, as they swept the snow around the cottage.

"Guid help ony puir traiveller at's oot da night," said John.

"Sae be dat," sighed Janet, as she slowed linked up the kettle, with the supper tatties.

Scarcely had these words been uttered, when a rap was heard at the door. John sprang up at once and undid the barricade, and as he opened the door two men, covered with snow, stepped in on the floor. John gazed for a moment in the face of the tallest, and then seizing him in his arms, cried: "My God! wir Willie!"

It seemed as if Janet could scarcely realize the truth; she repeated his name over and over again. "Willie, Willie, my Willie," she cried. "Oh! Loard, can it be true," and then doubting no longer she threw her arms around his neck and pressed him to her bosom.

Long and tender was that embrace, but at last Willie gently released himself, and pointing to his companion, of whom in their joy no notice had been taken, said,

"Dü ye ken dis man, faider?"

"Na," was the reply, "I ken him no, bit ony man is welcom ta my hoose wi sic a nicht."

The stranger then stepped forward, and laying his hand on John's shoulder, said: "Faider, can ye forgive your prodigal son, Magnie?"

Such a happy re-union seems too sacred a thing for words to describe, so we shall leave them in the midst of their joy, and briefly relate Willie's experiences since we left him.

When he recovered from his swoon he found himself on board the vessel (a large barque), and by his bedside stood the brother whom he had imagined to be dead, he being the second mate of the barque. They were bound on a long voyage, and when the destination was reached, Willie lost no time in writing to his parents, but postal arrangements were not so efficient then as now, and the consequence was that the letter was never received. They shipped a cargo, and in due course arrived in Britain, where the two brothers left the barque and travelled northwards, attracted in that direction by one of the dearest names on earth—home, and no better conclusion can be found than old Janet's words—

"Da Loard's name be praised, he dues a' things weel."

A Wrecking Adventure.

[FOUNDED ON FACT.]

BY JAS. ROBERTSON.

AS a reckless dare-devil, Lowrie Johnson, of Birness, did not have his equal in the whole island of Unst, and perhaps a good journey out of it, and he found a noble compeer in his bosom friend, young David Jeromson, of Lumtree.

It was a bitter day in the month of February, and both of them had been rummaging their brains how to pass the time, when David suddenly exclaimed—

"I'll tell dee what we'll dū, Lowrie; we'll get some o' da boys tageder, an' we'll geng oot alang da shore an' see if der ony wrack drivin'. It's been a nor-easterly gale fur da last day or twa noo, an' der shure ta be sometin' gaun oot alang da Huney."

"Man, David," returned his companion, "dat's just da very thing, so A'll juist rin ower ta da hoose, an' get suntin' i' me mooth, an' at da sam' time fetch Geordie o' Runey, an' wir Simon, an' du can see if ony o' da Midhouse boys' ill come."

"A' richt," said David, as he scampered off, "I'll meet dee doon at da Bulder Rock in half-an-oor."

At the appointed time they were at this meeting-place, along with five or six more youths, among whom was Lowrie's brother Simon, a delicate looking lad well up in his teens.

Out they set along the shore, keeping a sharp look-out to seaward as they went, and scanning every groyne and crevice in their line of march. Their efforts were crowned with success, far beyond their expectations, for by the time they had reached the shore opposite the island of Huney, they counted amongst the spoil, no less than three casks of paraffin oil, besides two large logs. As it was wearing late in the day, and sleet was commencing to fall, a consultation was held as to whether they should pursue the quest further or not. While they were deliberating, Lowrie's brother, Simon, who had been gazing intently at the opposite shore, suddenly exclaimed, "Boys, what's yon 'at's lyin' ashore ipo Huney." Everyone turned and gazed in the direction indicated.

"It's a great munster o' a spar," said David, "an' sae far as I can see, der some o' him still lying anunder da water."

I may here mention for the benefit of those who are unacquainted with the geographical details of this particular spot, that Huney is a small island, lying a few hundred yards off the east side of Unst, and connected with the latter by a sandbank.

This bank is thrown up by the conflicting tides that rush in round each end of the island, meeting violently in the centre of the sound.

The spar was a strong bait for our friends, but the puzzle was how to get within reach of it. A boat was out of the question, owing to the distance they would have to bring one, and also that the gale would not permit them to land it.

The only other way was over the top of the sandbank, which, it being the bottom of the tide, was now and then left bare by the receding billows.

David, who observed Lowrie's hungering look at the strip of sand that was now and then revealed to their gaze, suggested that they proceed homewards, and come back for the spar, when the weather eased.

"Na, David," answered Lowrie, who was not to be put off so easily, "de'il fit o' me gengs hame till I'm hed me haund ipo yon bit o' tree.

So wha'll geng wi' me, an' gie me a haund we him?"

"I'll geng wi' dee, Lowrie," shouted Geordie o' Runey, eager to emulate his adventurous companion, "bit be my sang, if we get catched afore we're across, we'll need nae mair shuger i' wir coffee."

Seeing that Lowrie's mind was firmly made up, David raised no further objection, as every moment's delay meant a worse chance for the success of their venture.

The tide, which had now turned, was steadily coming in, spurred by the tempest, and heaping up a mass of eddying water on the bank at each fresh inrush.

"Noo's wir time, Geordie," said Lowrie, as he rushed for the narrow slip of sand, while Geordie followed close at his heels. They had scarcely covered a quarter of the distance, when Lowrie's brother, Simon, broke suddenly away from the crowd, and made over the bank after his brother and Geordie.

"Come back, Simon," yelled David, as he glanced with horror at the gathering billows; but Simon continued his course, regardless of the warning shouts of his companions.

Onward in the run from death ran Lowrie and Geordie, who realized their position to the full; while Simon, now that he was little more than half-way across, noticed his danger, and half-halted to turn back.

"Run on noo for heevin's sake," shrieked David, who had followed him a bit along the bank, but Simon appeared to be paralyzed with terror, for he only continued his course mechanically.

The water on either side was now rushing fiercely towards him, as though eager to clutch its prey, while his companions, whom he had left behind, stood powerless to render assistance. Up over his boots and knees it came, and now his progress was but small, owing to the resistance of the water. The icy flood seemed to stir him into life, however, for he now, with an agonizing shriek strove his utmost to make headway through the overwhelming elements. Higher and higher it surged, until it reached his armpits, and then he was suddenly whirled off his feet, and out of sight by the mad combat of currents. Lowrie, who had made a desperate rush to save him, was almost submerged in a like manner, but he succeeded with difficulty in regaining the islet. Eagerly the watchers on either side of the sound looked for the re-appearance of the unfortunate youth, but nothing was visible save the foam on the black waters that had engulfed him. As soon as the water had receded far enough off the bank, Lowrie and David rushed along in hopes of his being left on it, but no sign of him could they see, and back they darted from the far returning billows.

Minutes of horrible suspense succeeded one another, until a quarter of an hour had passed, and by that time, as none of them had caught even a glimpse of him, all thoughts of saving life were discarded, still they lingered in the hopes that they might see, and be able to rescue the body. When nearly half-an-hour had elapsed since his disappearance, this also was about to be given up as futile, for it was now so dark that they could scarce make out the figures of Lowrie and Geordie on the islet. At last they saw both of them make a dash down among the rocks, and return shortly after carrying something resembling a body up from the shore, which they had little difficulty in recognising as that of their comrade.

David, dejected and sad at heart, now advised his remaining comrades to go with him and communicate the sad intelligence to the lad's father, and see what could be done in the way of getting to the island. This proposal was readily assented to, and with all speed they set out on their mission. Luckily they found old Laurence outside, and David undertook to tell him of what had occurred.

"Boys," said the old man huskily, when he had overcome the first shock of the evil tidings, "Ye'll better geng doon ta da noost an' mak' da boat ready for drawin', an' I'll be wi' you as sune as I'm been in alang da hoose."

In a twinkling they were at the noost, and by the time they had everything ready, Lowrence was with them accompanied by all the neighbours who could be of any assistance.

"Noo, lads," he said, "It'll be a coarse job, bit if we could only get her oot ower da track, we wid manage I tink." The first attempt to launch her she half-filled with water, and had to be hauled back and emptied. Time after time they tried to pass the barrier, with the result that she was either flung back, or else filled with water.

"I doot," said David, as they stood resting from their exertions, "'at da only wye 'at we'll get her apo' da water, 'ill be ta kerry her ower da laand till we're i' da lea o' Huney, fur we'll lay her in scolly-brods here afore we get her clear o' da brackin' water."

"I tink dü's right, David," returned the old man, "we'll never get her aff heel here, as dü says, so we'll just tak' dee advice."

It was a large undertaking to carry a boat nearly two miles over broken ground on a pitch dark night, but it was their only chance of rescuing the survivors from their cruel position. In a very short space of time they had the boat lashed across handspikes and pieces of timber, and were on the road with her, carried by willing volunteers. On they tramped in silence, guided by the feeble ray of a lantern, with the blinding sleet lashing at them under their cumbrous load. The night was well advanced by the time they reached their destination, which they did luckily without mishap. After depositing their burden on the beach, it was not considered advisable to attempt launching her until the terrific shower which was then in full blast had subsided.

After waiting for nearly an hour, signs of a lull were apparent, and after putting everything in readiness for launching, five of them got into her including old Laurence and David. Although under the lea of the islet, it was still no easy matter to get her clear of the surf. Every rower sat with his oar in readiness, and biding a favourable opportunity, they managed to give her a good start by the aid of those left behind. A few powerful strokes put them clear of the shore, and then they guessed their course by the wind, as they could not see over a boat's length ahead.

After baling out the little boat, which they had slipped, the old man waved the lantern which they had taken with them to let the lonely occupants of the island know that help was at hand. Close up under the shore they pulled, and still no voice answered their signal. "God forbid 'at ony thing he's happened ta my idder bairn," groaned the old man, after a prolonged shout together, and still no answer had come.

"Der nae iis o' wis wastin' wir breath roarin' ta dem ony mair," said David, "for da wind and sea is droondin' wir cries, so we'll better had her in alang an' geng ashore an' look for dem." This was at once acted on, and in case of holing the boat in the darkness, Laurence went forward with a light, and directed them how to pull.

When Lowrie and Geordie had rescued the body of Simon, the former, who was half frantic at the dreadful catastrophe that had occurred insisted on sitting over the remains until help was brought. Yielding at last to the saner counsel of his companions he acquiesced in giving it temporary burial among the shingle at the top of the beach.

This being accomplished, they proceeded to erect a rude shelter for themselves, as they reckoned on being compelled to pass the whole night in their bleak quarters. A kind of sandpit formed by the earth caving in over a rabbit burrow was the place fixed on. While they were busy tearing out pieces of turf, and gathering material for their purpose, a gigantic wave swept in along the shore close by where they were working, and lifted the coveted spar from its lodgement, dashed it in fragments on the rocks close by.

This incident, in itself, would have passed with very little notice on their part, but it drew their attention to where their comrade was buried.

"Lowrie," said Geordie quietly, "we'll hae ta shift da remains, for whin da flude is at da tap, a big sea lack yun wid laekly sweep it awa."

"So it wid," returned Lowrie quickly, "it's a gude job doo noticed it, so we'll just shift it is lang is dis glim o' licht is left."

As the body was being uncovered, Lowrie's grief burst out afresh, and when the shingle were removed from the pale upturned face, he prostrated himself over the body, and kissed the cold lips. Scarcely had he done so, when he started like one stabbed, and then gazed intently at his brother's face. After remaining like this for a few seconds, he sprang to his feet with a wild cry, and shouted, "My God! he's alive yet, da blibe at his nose is movin' back and fore."

At first, Geordie thought that his companion had gone mad, but on examining the sign indicated, he thought that there was a feeble attempt to breathe.

Quick as thought, they turned the body on its face to get clear of any water, and then laying it in its former position, they commenced to move the arms so as to help respiration.

While Lowrie wrought his arms, Geordie stripped off the wet clothing, and proceeded to chafe the cold limbs. After working in this manner for about ten minutes, they observed a distinct effort to breathe on Simon's part. Geordie now took a spell at working the arms, while Lowrie threw off a thick reefer jacket which he had on, and wrapped it round the naked body.

"We'll tak him ta da shelter noo," said Lowrie, as he caught the seeming lifeless body in his arms and ran swiftly towards the sandpit. Having placed him in the driest nook they could find, they strove to the utmost of their skill and knowledge, to restore animation.

Stripping themselves to the shirt and trousers, regardless of their own exposure to the elements, each again wrought with him by turns, while the other laboured hard to complete the building of the shelter. When they had done all that they thought necessary in the way of working the arms and chafing the body, both took turn about in lying beside their patient to restore circulation. In this manner the night crept on. The wind still blew with unabated violence, and the sleet came down in heavy and prolonged showers. Nothing short of violent exercise on the part of Lowrie and Geordie could keep up their own warmth, for besides the chilling night, they were almost frozen by lying a few minutes beside Simon. Lowrie was exceedingly uneasy lest his brother was making no further progress towards recovery, as midnight had come, and still Simon had uttered no sound or given any sign of returning consciousness.

About one in the morning, however, a faint groan broke from his lips, and a slight effort to move was perceptible. Lowrie, who was with him at the time, was so overjoyed at their success, that he was about to call his comrade and inform him of it, when the latter, who had just left the shelter a moment before, returned with the welcome news that there was a boat carrying a light almost across the sound.

"Lat wis loss nae time, dan," exclaimed Lowrie, as he wrapped the clothing close round his brother. They then took him in their arms and carried him down to the shore, reaching it almost as the boat's bow grounded.

"Mak' ready for shivin' aff agen," shouted Lowrie, as they came down over the beach with their burden. "Simon is coming round laek a hoos afire, an'—"

"Comin' roond," interrupted the boat's crew in chorus, while the old man jumped out on the beach and held the lantern close to Simon's face as though to assure himself of the fact.

"God be praised," he exclaimed, "he's truly livin', so get in ta da boat, boys, as fast as ye can."

In an instant they were all aboard. Simon was placed aft beside his father, and the boat was speeding back across the sound, propelled by energetic strokes. A cry from those who had been left on the mainland, directed them to the landing-place, and running in on the top of a sea, they had the boat safely ashore, and up out of reach of the breaking water in a twinkling. When the almost incredible news had been communicated to the remainder of the party, a rude stretcher for Simon was quickly constructed, while Lowrie and Geordie, both of whom presented a rather wild appearance in their semi-dressed state, had dry jackets supplied to them by their comrades.

David, who was in exuberant spirits over the happy termination of the night's adventures, ran on ahead to warn Simon's mother and the rest of his family of his safety, and before the rest of the party were half-way home, he had returned with some brandy for Simon, which he had procured at his own house. A week or so after that eventful night, and Simon was able to walk about again little the worse of his narrow escape, and to this day both he and the principal actors in that bit of drama record it as a unique and not to be repeated experience in their lives.

Old Norse Notions of the Arctic World.

[ALL RIGHTS RESERVED.]

AT the present period, when Dr Nansen's adventures in the world of ice have given Norsemen of to-day the subject matter of a new "Frithjof's Saga" greater than the old, it is interesting to lift the veil of intervening time and see what kind of notions the old Norsemen had about that "Far, White North" 700 years ago. Those old Norse notions of the Frozen Zone are found recorded in a strange and solitary book entitled "Konungs Skuggsja, Speculum Regale, or the King's Mirror." This ancient work was written somewhere about the year 1230 A.D., and it is quite unique among old Northern books, for it is the only one of them that has a purely didactic character that aims at giving a philosophy of life. The book is in the form of dialogues between a father and a son, and the unknown author, who plays the part of son, tells us in his introduction that his father fully and wisely answered all his questions about the various walks of life a man might choose—as the life of chapmen or merchants, life at a King's Court, life of clerks or learned men, and life of the common people. But in the book itself only the first two divisions appear. The other two were either never completed, or were completed and afterwards lost. The conversations are full of long digressions which are the most interesting portions of the book. The ideas entertained about the Arctic world are to be found in a digression forming part of the long conversation on the merchant's life, in which, of course, seafaring was inevitable. Dr Nansen, in his well-known book, "Paa Ski over Grönland" (Across Greenland on Snow-skates), pays a high tribute to this fragment of old world science by remarking that the descriptions in "The King's Mirror" of the nature and conduct of the ice on the coasts of Greenland could not be better or more accurately written at the present day. In the following paragraph I give an almost literal rendering of one passage in the "Konung's Skuggsja" to which Dr Nansen so alludes. The father has been speaking of the wonders of the Arctic Ocean, and proceeds:—

In this same ocean there are many more wonders, even if they cannot be reckoned among the number of monsters. As soon as the greater part of the Main has been crossed, there is so vast a quantity of ice that I know not the like of it anywhere else in all the world. Some of these ice-floes are as flat to look at as if they had frozen in the sea itself, and yet are four to five ells in thickness (eight to ten feet), and they lie so far out from the land that men may travel for four days or more across the ice before the land is reached. But these ice-floes lie more towards the north-east or north of the land than towards the south, the south-west, or the west, and therefore must all, who wish to reach the land, sail round it until they have got past these ice-floes, and then sail in towards it. It has often happened that men have too hastily pushed in towards the land, and have therefore got among these ice-floes. So have some of them afterwards perished, but others have escaped, and we have seen some of them and have heard their sayings and reports. All those who have come in among this drift-ice have resorted to the plan of taking their boats, and dragging them with them on the ice, have so sought the land, while their sea-going ship and all their other belongings have been left behind and lost; but some have lived out on the ice for four or five days or longer before they have reached land. These ice-floes have a strange nature; sometimes they lie as still as might be expected of them, with separate openings and great firths; but sometimes their speed is so strong and violent that they go not slower than a ship with a good wind, and they fare just as often against as with the wind when once they come to drift. There are also in that ocean some ice-masses which have another form, and which the Greenlanders call "Falliacla"—Ice-Mountains. They look as if a great mountain rose from the sea, and they mingle not with other ice-masses, but stand always by themselves.

Amongst the monsters which the father hints at in the first line of the passage quoted is the "Margygr" or Mermaid, which does not seem to have struck the old Norsemen as in any way an attractive creature, for, though it is described as being something like a woman in the upper part of its body, he tells the son that it is very ugly, with wrinkled cheeks and of a fierce and frightful aspect. It is wont to appear to mariners before great storms, he says, and is seen usually holding fish in its webbed hands. If it plays with the fish or flings them towards the ship, there will be a loss of life among the crew; but if it eats the fish, or flings them into the sea away from the ship, there is no danger to be apprehended from the coming storm. Immediately after speaking of the ice, he goes on to tell the son about the seals, walruses, whales, &c., found in those icy waters, in the course of which description comes the quaint remark that seals and walruses must be looked upon as flesh, and therefore must on no account be eaten on the Fast Days, while whales may freely be "enjoyed" on Fast Days just like other fish.

Considering the period at which the book was written there is a remarkable accuracy in its descriptions of the changes of the seasons, and the movements of the earth, into which the father enters so as to instruct the son in everything required to make him a good mariner. In one place he speaks clearly of the earth as a ball, although the popular idea of his time was that it was a disc. He mentions the obliquity of the sun's path across the heavens as the explanation of the seasons, and speaks, too, of the five great zones. He counts the Torrid Zone and the two Frigids as almost uninhabitable. The weather in the Far North, he says, is to be called good in summer. In the winter there are very violent storms, but though these storms are very violent while they last they do not last long, and there are usually lengthy intervals of quiet weather. The long quiet intervals he explains as owing to the nature of the land ice, about which he says:—"It ever blows from itself a cold blast, which drives all storm clouds away from its face, so that it for most part keeps a clear atmosphere over itself, but its nearest neighbours always suffer for this, as all lands that lie in its neighbourhood receive tempestuous weather from it, and all the storms it drives away from itself come down upon the others with piercing blast."

His statements regarding the ice-covered interior of Greenland, as far as it had at that remote time been explored, agree exactly with the results of Nordenskjöld's expedition in 1883. Nordenskjöld and his party advanced into the interior, and though there from July till September, found everywhere nothing but mountains of ice and snow. Nansen and Sverdrup, with four companions, crossed the country on snow-shoes in 1888. They were away from July of that year till May of the following year, when they returned to Copenhagen, having conquered immense hardships in that journey over the ice and snow. It will be remembered that this journey was described by Dr Nansen at a meeting of the Royal Geographical Society on June 24th, 1889, and that the description of his first crossing of Greenland was published in December 1890.

The father speaks of the Aurora Borealis or Northern Lights, and of the way in which they glimmer through the long dark nights with varying intensity, and shoot aloft in points of varying height. He says they shine so brightly that a traveller can go easily upon his way, and that a man can recognise the others with him in a room if it has windows in it. The smoke or steam that seems to rise up sometimes from the ground and hide the fair and varying light is due, he says, to what he calls "a thawing breath" sent out from the great rifts that here and there occur in the ice masses covering land and sea. About the cause of the aurora, he informs the son that some have thought that the earth was surrounded by fire, of which the Northern Lights were a reflection; that others have supposed them to be rays which the sun in his nightly journey under the earth shot upward "round the rim of the world," close to which Greenland was believed to lie; while others still have thought that the ice and frost there are in such great strength that this itself might be the cause of such a gleaming light.

Muckle Rasmie: Fisherman.

Being an incident in his life, as chronicled by himself, and now re-written and Englished: By H. D.

I ALWAYS had a strong antipathy to the sea, in fact, to all water in general, propagated, I have no doubt, by certain corporal castigations I had to undergo upon the paternal knee, consequent upon the fact that I invariably came in from da skül wi' my feet weet up abüne da küts. This condition never failed to call down condign punishment upon my defenceless head (defenceless save for the ricklin's o' an auld pirnie.)

Acting on that law of nature which demonstrates that action and reaction, are equal and opposite, I carried the art of keepin' myself dry, to what some evil-minded people called a vice, (and that knowing I washed my face regularly, with only short intervals of six months.) I developed a kind of hydrophobia as yet unclassed by professors scientific, being afraid of venturing within half-a-mile of Neptune's domains, for fear of incurring the penalty of the rope's end. The early desire for wet feet and general puddling, being thus nipped in the bud, the pleasures of boating and angling were unknown to me, which, by-the-way, was perhaps no loss, considering I cultivated higher arts after I left school, said higher arts consisting of the intellectual treat of rolling down the steepest brae I could find, which I did to show my mates that the principle of gravitation was a myth, and that Sir Isaac Newton was verily a dreamer of dreams. But c'est l'homme propose, etc.; ere I reached the foot my ideas were changed, on that point, and, moreover, it came to pass when I rose up I discovered to my intense chagrin, that my trousers' seat had managed to separate itself from the main body of my unmentionables, and at that same moment was cosily embracing a sharp pointed stone half-way up the brae. This disaster made me form a resolution, to leave matters scientific to those qualified to deal therewith, a resolution unbroken to the present day. The tying of the neighbours' cats' tails together, also engrossed a considerable part of my intellectual expansion scheme, and now and again, whenever the opportunity presented itself, throwing a bucket of water out the door — on some one else's head. But

"Nae man can tether time or tide,
The hoor approaches Tam maun ride."

Meaning by "Tam" yours truly, The Great Unwashed, and by "ride" that easy and luxurious mode of living called in Shetland, "gaen ta da sea."

My faith, I was intended for something better than that, and would have got it too, only there were certain little drawbacks, such as the inability to exceed in arithmetic the terrible strain of multiplying four by six; the protesting in the master's face, that the word John, was a numeral adjective; the continued indulgence in a sort of Charlie Peace facial contortion, whenever the dominie's back was turned. O dear, how well I remember one day the Dominie's head turned, with a swiftness that was surprising, I was caught in the act of elongating my mouth until there was an uninterrupted cavity from ear to ear, then rolling my eyes about in a manner which some super-religious people called diabolical, and sundry other little pranks, disagreeable apparently to the Dragon, (as we styled the teacher), but as far as I ever saw, strictly proper and honourable in a boy of the advanced age of 11½ years.

The Dragon stood for a moment speechless with wrath, then he grasped the tawes, raised himself up to his full length, preparatory to giving me a quietus for that time; nay of a truth, I believe it would have been for all time, when a passing ray of intelligence informed me that a closer intimacy with that tails of leather, was by no means desirable, consequently I didn't wait for them to descend, but dodged out between the lanky legs of the infuriated Dragon, and he had the satisfaction, extreme satisfaction I hope, of receiving the benefit of his own muscular exertion right on his own legs.

These and other little escapades of mine, resulted in giving the proverbial dog the bad name, and in me, you behold another sad instance of virtue unrewarded, genius unappreciated, sterling worth unrecognised—but why continue, why harass the tender bosom of the public, why in language metaphorical, black their eyes, and generally bust 'em up, with the repetition of my wrongs. Let me continue.

There being no vacant living near at hand I could apply for, no lucrative medical practice I could honour by taking up, and as a friend said, no Asylum for the admission of hopeless Lunatics in Shetland, though what that had to do with me, I utterly failed to see, (could you help me with the meaning, reader?) I was obliged to go to da sea. My hydrophobic propensities before mentioned, received a severe shock, on this being first intimated to me, but on being further informed that my boat mates were Tammie Tüllie, and Johnnie Gurdie, I was somewhat more reconciled to my lot. The two gentlemen were universally recognised as admirable companions, exemplary kirk members, in short a pair of human beings with about a half of the usual complement of world, flesh, and devil, consequently I was given to understand that my lines had indeed fallen in pleasant places.

Well, the first day we went to da sea, I got along splendidly, gloriously, in fact, until we came to launch the boat, when as I was shoving it off, I lost my equilibrium, the boat floated seawards with me in the water, clinging tenaciously to da horn.

After a few minutes had passed with me in this predicament, Tammie Tüllie looked over the side of the boat, and with what the novelists call a suave smile, requested me to come inside the boat, that being the usual method of procedure of those that go down to the sea in yoles, but adding that if I preferred it, I was quite welcome to stay where I was, as he considered it a much needed ablution I was receiving. I redoubled my efforts to get inside; they, however, were unavailing, until Johnnie yoked da clip i' da back o' my breeks, and giving a big hitch on himself, landed me in the bottom of the boat, a sadder and a wetter man by several points, than ever I was before.

"Set tü noo, du useless stock, and row to warm desel," said Tüllie.

Well, I did so. I gave one mighty stroke of the oars, but, my friends, note well it was only one. A second was not forthcoming. I in my frantic endeavour to learn the mystery of rowing the oars, consequent upon the extreme muscular exertion expended by me, came bang against the sides of the boat, at a rate that was astonishing. With an equal velocity I shot forward (that is forward in the boat—backward so far as I was concerned), between Tüllie's legs, nearly knocking my brains (never alas! very much) out on the fore band, and performed the acrobatic feat of standing bolt upright for a couple of seconds with my head on the keel, and my legs pointing towards the zenith (isna dat da wurd, Mr Editor?) "Action and re-action" has been mentioned above. My friends, you should have seen that re-action. My legs came down whirring through the air. I planted the toes of my hobnailed boots right on the cranium of Gurdie, which elicited from him a soond, which sounded suspiciously like the name of a town in Palestine, the last part of which is —ascus, and he further requested me to betake myself somewhere, yes somewhere, where coals, peats, and similar commodities are regarded as superfluities.

Well, we reached "Da Shauld," and as it was springing up a fine laur o' wind, we prepared to draig under sail.

"Step da mast, dü peerie limmer," said Johnnie.

I rose to do so, lifted the mast, and was getting on with the ticklish business Ax, when my foot gave a skeet from under me, the mast described a semicircle in the air, and landed with what he afterwards described as an "ündümious whirrict on his rumple," on a somewhat tender part of Tammie's anatomy. He had been standing or rather "looting" in the bow of the boat preparatory to fixing the "head tow" at the required length, when I got the mast set, but that event never came to pass.

I was determined not to be jawed this time, as I could not for the life of me see why he had struck the mast so hard with his ugly rig as to break it in two (the mast I mean, not the rig, that would have caused no regret, to me at any rate.)

"What means dü, dü auld ogre," said I, (calling him by a name some young gentleman called yours truly when he was graduating B.A., which, by the way, stands for blooming ass), "cud du no lay de rumple aisier tü ta da mast, du sees what du's düne noo, du auld nisbegotten lubber it du is."

He stood for a little drawing his hand over the injured part, and aye "hüff hüffin" with his mouth, but never a word spoke he, until, perhaps, the space of five minutes had passed, when softly, calmly, yet determined as a Spartan in the Pass of Thermopylæ, he reached for the "trüin," took out the knife we had for "dichtin" with, drew him several times over the whetting stone, and then sat down in the "ring," and deliberately surveyed the edge. Apparently satisfied with it he rose suddenly, evidently going to finish me, but poor Rasmie was not destined thus to die. Individuals like him, who are born to be hung never die by the knife, least that's what my friends said afterwards, when I related this episode to them. Fortune favoured me, for the first and last time, I think, for a sharp twinge of pain passed through the injured part of Tammie's body (delicacy forbids me to be more detailed), causing him to subside with a yell like an Indian on the warpath into the ring again, and thank goodness! oblivious of everything save the pain, the knife dropped overboard out of his hand. Meanwhile I satirically hummed, "The man who broke his h'm h'm."

After a little Tammie recovered, and the knife being lost, he disdained to hit me with his fist, yet I knew my punishment was not abandoned, only postponed, for he muttered savagely, "Just waet dee, boy, du's catch it whin we come ashore."

Now, you will observe our mast was broken, so we were compelled to "aandu" the boat instead of the customary sailing whenever the wind is available. This did not improve the temper of my shipmates. All the stories I had read in penny dreadfuls about dear little innocent boys (like me, for instance) being murdered by great ugly black bearded men—a sort of Babes-in-the-wood feeling came over me. I read my doom in the ugly face of Tüllie, yea, as plain as though it had been written in great "muckle letters like dis."

RASMIE, DY DUME IS SEALED.

(I have given the above inscription as near as possible to that in the M.S., given me by the late Rasmie. H.D.)

But my imagination did not get long to expend itself, for I was required to row. Tüllie was unable to do so owing to his inability to sit with any degree of comfort on the thwart. Yet judging by my former experience, Gurdie considered it advisable to row himself and let me "draig," as he called it. "Draig what," says I, not comprehending him. "Draig! boy, draig saithe, or cod, or ling, or tusk, or—whales." Well, I took my seat on the aft thwart, threw out my line, and waited. "Fu mony men does it tak ta haul a cod," says I, in the simplicity of my gushing boyhood.

"I's tell dee when he fassens," replied Johnie laconically.

A little while afterwards I felt a tug, and then a weight "clogged on ta da line," till I thought there must be a sea-serpent on at least. I took a turn round my hand, and held on like grim death, but not an inch could I gain. I paused my feet against the footstep, and exerted my strength to the utmost limit, but still no gain. But I determined to succeed. What if it really was the Sea-Serpent, that much-talked of denizen of the deep; what if I should make myself a great name! Yes, my fancy took a higher flight. I made sure it was one. I fancied myself feted in London, first the guest of professors of science, yea, even indolised by royalty itself. This was my sea-serpent, mine alone. The plebeian names of Tüllie, and Gurdie, should never resound through after ages coupled with mine, never! Mine the honour unfading! Mine the glory undying. There upon that Shetland beach will I land the great sea-serpent; the unrivalled slimyosaurus, the wonder of wonders to my simple fellow islanders, the longed-for hope of bald-headed professors, etc. My word! but I was pulling and no mistake, when making one last great mighty effort, I threw the line over my shoulder, and pulled like one possessed. But, alas! that I should pen it! My fondest, dearest hope, was shattered, my line broke! Misfortunes never come singly, and this was the signal for a burst of laughter from Gurdie. Tüllie, by the way, was by no means in an hilarious mood. He, like the Dame in "Tamm o' Shanter," was nursing his wrath to keep it warm.

I verily believe these two fiends incarnate knew all the time that my line had been fast in the bottom. Still my calamities did not end. Malle-mer, or what your fin-de-siecle young lady calls the "oh my's," came on with all its accompanying pleasures. I felt a sensation as if my inside works were going to transplant themselves to the outside, via my mouth. Life appeared a blank; death a sweet repose, happy in comparison to this, but there was no remedy. Hooch! woof, gone da best denner o' fish an' tatties ever was etten.

"But 'twas ever thus since childhood's hour
I've seen my fondest hopes decay;
And there I lay without the power,
Within myself that food to stay.

But the tide was done. I thanked God. Our complement consisted of 3 hoes, and a crooner, caught by Gurdie, preparatory to the mast incident which disabled Tammie. And to add to the chagrin of my mates, all the other boats averaged 10 cwt's of cod.

(But I must now close this extract from the Chronicles of Rasmie. Mayhap at some future date, if this meets with acceptance, I may tell you how Rasmie did a noble deed, and how Rasmie won his wife, and sundry other incidents, which this eccentric old Shetlander committed to M. S., which I have been fortunate enough to obtain.)

Two Old Shetland Fiddlers.

"SINGIN' LOWRIE."

[Drawn by Wm. Nicolson, jr.]

THE above drawing, from an old photograph by the late Mr Ross Smith, (as will be acknowledged by all who remember him), is an excellent likeness of Laurence Laurenson, otherwise known as "Singin' Lowrie." The sobriquet of "Singin' Lowrie" seems to have been somewhat of a misnomer, for it is said that he could not sing at all, and that he often lamented the want of voice which prevented him giving vocal utterance to the music he so well understood. But his connection with music no doubt earned for him the nickname.

Lowrie was born in the island of Yell about the beginning of the present century, but seems to have gravitated early to Lerwick, where most of his life was spent. He became acquainted with a blind musician, named Melrose, who taught him to "pinch the harp, touch the piano, and draw the bow." For many years he lived an erratic life, going about the country, tuning pianos, playing and teaching the violin, and conducting singing classes.

There was a good deal of eccentricity about Mr Laurenson. His usual garb was generally a kind of surtout coat very light of texture, patent leather boots, and for head-dress a small snug smoking cap. In his hand he carried a rather genteel kind of stick, never touching the ground. After one of his visits south, he wore a Glengarry Cap, and an Inverness Cape, perhaps as a kind of evidence of the fact that he had been beyond the confines of his native Isles. But notwithstanding his eccentricities and failings, there was an unmistakable air of refinement about him. Quiet and inoffensive, and always with the air of one who "might have beeu" something better, he was welcomed wherever he went.

A good story is told of him which displays the ready wit he possessed. A certain innkeeper—not of the masculine fraternity—(the story goes)—who always had a good word for him, cordially welcomed him on taking shelter one "raw and gusty day."

Freezing with cold, our musician naturally drew his chair towards the kitchen range. "Well," said mine hostess, "everything, both big and peerie, piano, flute, and fiddle, is all out of tune. You have just come in the nick of time. Now, what will you take? Shall I bring you a glass of whisky, a glass of porter, or a drop toddy?"

The wayfarer rubbed his benumbed hands, and made a somewhat characteristic answer. "Since you're so very kind, madam, and as I'm really stiff with cold, I'll first accept the kindly proffered glass of whisky, and then while you are preparing the toddy, I shall have much pleasure in again drinking your health over a quiet bottle of porter."

Mrs — — —, delighted with the witty reply, furnished her guest with the restoratives enumerated.

Lowrie died about the year 1876. His latter days, sad to say, were spent in poverty, and it is to be feared that his unfortunate habits were often the cause of his going without the necessities of life.

J A M E S      S T O U T.

THE photographic art has presented for us another old worthy, Mr James Stout, who, along with his brother Thomas, was famed for his extraordinary musical abilities. He was born at the beginning of the present century. For some years, he taught a day school in one of the rooms of the Tolbooth, and he was also much in demand for the teaching of music. He is said to have been an excellent executant on piano and violin. He collaborated with his brother Thomas in composing some sacred melodies, symphonies, and a march, which were published. This collection is now very rare. During the latter period of his life, he resided at Reawick, where he died in the sixties.

PLOYEN'S REMINISCENCES OF A VOYAGE TO
SHETLAND, ORKNEY, & SCOTLAND
TRANSLATED BY MISS CATHERINE SPENCE.

SECOND EDITION.

The First Edition of this interesting book having been exhausted shortly after publication, a Second Edition is now ready.

The Dundee Advertiser says:—Mr Ployen was a shrewd and cultured man, and his observations are graphic and exceedingly interesting, especially in view of the immense changes which have taken place during the intervening half-century.

SEA SONG.
“RUNNING FREE,”
WORDS BY JESSIE M. E. SAXBY, MUSIC BY THOMAS MANSON.

The Shetland Times says:—We must congratulate Mr Manson on this his newest musical composition. It is thoroughly bright, melodious, effective, and musically, without any very great difficulties. It is happily wedded to suitable words by Mrs Saxby. The accompaniment is done with admirable taste.

Price ONE SHILLING nett. POST FREE, 1s 0½d.

Price 6d, by Post 6½d. (In Staff and Sol-fa Notations.)

SECOND EDITION.
DA LAST NOOST
(With Pianoforte Accompaniment.)
A SHETLAND FOLK SONG.
WRITTEN BY L. J. NICOLSON.
SET TO MUSIC BY THOS. MANSON.

Scotsman :—T. & J. Manson, Lerwick, have sent out a quaint and charming Shetland Folk Song, written by L. J. Nicolson, composed by Thomas Manson, and entitled DA LAST NOOST—noost meaning the winter quarter of a Shetland boat. Both words and music have a quiet simplicity and pathos, and many plain suggestions of the sea.

SHETLAND FIRESIDE TALES.

BY

GEORGE STEWART,

PRICE, 1s 6d.

POST FREE, 1s 9d.

Opinions of the Press on the First Edition (1877):—

Scotsman.—The author's design has been to preserve in some form the legends and fairy tales of Shetland, and the result of his labour of love has been the production of a really delightful book. He has chosen the form of a continuous narrative, but the book is really what it aims to be, a collection of fireside tales. Much of the story is written in the strange dialect of these wild, northern isles, but to our mind this adds a charm to the book without presenting any serious difficulty to the general reader, since the author has provided a copious vocabulary. The stories themselves are full of interest, and some of them are very fascinating. But the book derives a special value from the appendix attached to it. The author's notes on the folk-lore of the Shetlands are not only interesting, but form an important contribution to this department of literature.

Glasgow Herald.—The book abounds with quaint old songs and ballads, and in stories of robbery and witchcraft; but these are so excellent in themselves, so well told, and introduced with so deft a hand withal, that even the keenest follower-up of plot schemes, will be under but little temptation to skip. The main strand of the plot is necessarily simple; but it is quite strong enough in interest to bind the whole together. The literary merit of the book is high, and its value as a handbook of Shetland customs and superstitions, and, let us add, as the literary embalmment of a Shetland dialect which is yearly becoming fainter and fainter, will continue, we venture to predict, to increase as the work becomes known.

SCOTCH MAKE.

Much better than the Irish article, and it is absolutely Damp-Proof, and is also the only Felt which has not to be tarred when put on. Any handy man can put it on.

Manufactured by C. DAVIDSON & SONS, Limited, Aberdeen.

PRICES. { No. 1. THICK.....8d per lineal yard, 32 inches wide, and 25 yards long.
 { No. 2. Medium.....6d                    Do.,            do.,            do.,            do.
 { No. 3. THIN.....5d                    Do.,            do.,            do.,            do.

Nos. 2 and 3 are used for very Temporary Roofs, and also for going under slates. Sold in Rolls 25 yards long. Each Roll bears the Trade Mark of a Thistle in a Triangle.

Special Quotations for Large Quantities, in Rolls, 25 yds. long, 32 in. wide

PATENT ANTI-DAMP FOUNDATION FELT.

This Felt is specially made in various widths to suit walls of different thicknesses. It is absolutely watertight, and being pliable is not liable to crack, if the wall subsides at all, as hard pitch sometimes does.

It is easily applied, and prevents with absolute certainty any damp from ascending the wall.

Sold by all large Ironmongers and Dealers in Builders' Materials in the following widths:—5, 10, 15, 20, 25, and 32 inches, at 1d per square yard (with discount to dealers).

To be had from all WHOLESALE IRONMONGERS in the KINGDOM, and JAMES FLETT & SONS, Kirkwall, and HAY & Co., Merchants, Lerwick.

SANITARY CEDAR FELT (Patented.)

For Laying under Carpets, Floorcloths, &c.

THIS FELT is really the only one in the Market which is impervious to Moths and other Insects. It retains for years the aroma of the Cedar Wood, the essence of which is incorporated in its substance. Makes the Carpet last twice as long, by protecting it from hard uneven flooring. Prevents Draughts and Dust coming through seams and cracks in the floor, thus keeping the Room warm. Lies quite Flat, requires no fastening down, may be taken up and re-laid when necessary. Makes the Carpet feel much thicker and softer to the tread—an ordinary Carpet with two layers of Under-Felt will feel almost like a Turkey Carpet. Supersedes the Brown Paper sometimes used, which CRACKLES, and is no protection to the Carpet, being as hard as the flooring.

PRICE PER YARD.	60 Inches Wide..	6d	30 Inches Wide.....	3d
	{ 54	Do.	5½d	2½d

Supplied in Rolls of 50, 25, or 12 yards long, in either of above widths. The Rolls are stamped exactly at each yard with the Trade Mark for convenience in measuring off. To be had from all Stationers, Drapers, Ironmongers, Upholsterers.

Samples to be had from any of the above trades, or direct from Manufacturers on application.

Testimonials.

Hagh End, Balne, Snaith.
 I have used Cupiss' Constitution Balls for many years with the best of success for Grease, Swelling of the Legs and Farcy.—JOHN WHEATER.

Kerse, Johnstone, Lockerbie.
 I have used your Constitution
 Balls for both Horses, Cattle, and Sheep, for upwards of 30 years, and was always highly pleased with results.—R. MCGREGOR.

Sutton Farm, Boyton.
 I had a weakly Yearling, troubled with Scouring. I gave one Ball at two different times, and the result was a perfect cure.—S. CORY.

And for Scouring in Calves and Lambs they are almost infallible

They restore the healthy functions of the Digestive Organs, fortify and strengthen the constitution, give tone and vigour to the whole system, and prevent the injurious results of over exertion or improper feeding. Bullocks fatten much faster by occasionally having a Ball, and by their frequent use Young Animals grow to a larger size and come to earlier perfection with the same quantity of food.
